

Abstract

Method of applying liquid or pastelike substances, especially thermoplastics, to a backing material, the substance being applied by means of a die at least partly to the backing material traveling along on the die, wherein

- the die body is bent transversely to the direction of travel of the backing material and
- the bending is induced by temperature differences within the die body.